VanScan® Overview

The Challenge

Receiving Timely Results of Paper-Based Assessments

Many school districts lack the technology infrastructure and/or computer resources necessary to conduct online assessments for large groups of students, and instead rely on traditional paper-based examinations for statewide high-stakes tests and district-level benchmark assessments. Unfortunately, this process is often hampered by an inefficient scoring process, which takes weeks or even months to return test scores to educators. By that time, the opportunity to provide remediation based on the results has long since passed. Instead, school districts using paper-based assessments need a way to provide educators with timely data that they can use to drive individualized instruction and targeted remediation strategies.
